Jodhpore—Jain temples in India community founded principles included renunciation, self-sacrifice to the point that over a million of members of the order are or have been ascetics and highly respected.

Jodhpore—Jain Temple. Many of the most beautiful temples in India were built by the Jains, an ascetic community founded five centuries B.C. Their principles included non-injury of any living thing, and self-sacrifice to the extent of self-torture. There are over a million of their adherents in India. Members of the order are often learned and the laity are wealthy and highly respected.
